Subtests and scores

The CDA exam is three scored components taken in one sitting: RHS (Radiation Health and Safety), ICE (Infection Control), and GC (General Chairside). DANB does not publish a specific numeric cut score or scaled passing score for these components in its public materials — don't trust a precise "you need X points" figure from an unofficial source. Instead, prepare to perform accurately and confidently across all three areas rather than chasing a target number. GC carries the largest question count of the three named components, so it's the single biggest content area to master.

High-yield review areas

- RHS: x-ray equipment operation, radiation biology and safety, patient/operator protection, image quality
- ICE: sterilization and disinfection procedures, PPE, hazard communication, disease-transmission prevention
- GC: chairside assisting across specialties, patient education, dental materials preparation and care — the broadest content pool of the three

Top traps

- Assuming there's one flat "CDA score" — it's three separately scored components administered together, not one blended score
- Underestimating RHS because it's the smallest section by question count — radiation-safety questions are detail-heavy and precise
- Treating the $75 application fee as refundable if plans change — it is not, under any circumstances
- Waiting near the end of your 60-day test window to schedule — book as soon as you're authorized
- Forgetting that CDA certification requires annual renewal — passing the exam isn't the end of the commitment
- Studying each component in isolation instead of practicing the full 195-minute combined session, which is how the real exam actually runs

- Assuming eligibility hours can be rushed — the 3,500-hour minimum must be accrued over at least two years, so there's no way to compress the timeline by working extra shifts in a single month
